Was there a specific course (or courses) you considered more valuable than others?

- * All the interviewing classes
- * Theories, pharmacology and child development are a few of the classes that I have found helpful in my occupation as a addictions counselor.
- * Library class
- * Every class had significant value. They are specifically suited to the "helper" line of work.
- * Psychopharmacology, better boundaries, the psychology courses, intro to social work.
- * Motivational interviewing
- * Grant Writing, Groups
- * Many classes helped prepare me to work with homeless youth in a shelter environment... addictions, culture awareness, lifespan, disorders, tic, counseling, boundaries, intern program, Kathleen's interviewing lab.
- * I really can not pick just one or a few specific courses. The Mental Health & Human Services program as a whole has been the most valuable experience in my life so far. Continuing my education at a University, and in my daily life, skills learned from the program are referenced to frequently.
- * Basic Attending SkillsSelf-careAll of the courses were valuabe
- * Human Development was a big interest to me and also the Cultural class, I would recommend more time and literature on that subject.
- * Kathleen's classes. Group classes.

Are there any specific topics or subjects that the MHHS program did not cover?

* I think that the courses on Case management could be updated and modernized and could reflect more ASAM and DSM criteria.

* n/a

* More cultural specific information

* I think a basic course of recognizing and preventing common diseases/illnesses would be helpful for students. I had MRSA on my elbow when I interned at elderly facility and assumed it was a small pimple then spider bite for the first few days. I didn't know what MRSA was until I went to doctor. Also little more on working w late stage dementia, especially meeting their health needs when they aren't able to describe their problem.

* This program touched on just about every aspect of social work, addiction that I have come across yet.

* using the internet to find resources of different variety.
